.Q: Visual Studio 2005 in-place diffing Can somebody tell me how to setup Visual Studio 2005 to do in-place diffs? In eclipse you can just drag and drop the file you want to compare, and it will do the diff for you. I am currently using Visual Studio 2005 for C# development and would like to do the same thing for a file that I am editing in the same window. Is there some registry key I can set or something? A: You can use the Merge tool. You can also use the Open with/Edit with... dialogue to select a different tool. A: Since VS2010 you can use the Merge tool, which is available under the Team Explorer view. To access it just hover the cursor on the Quick Diff icon and select Merge A: VS2010/VS2013/VS2015 it's all the same. Right click on the file -> Open With -> Edit with -> Merge This all can be controlled via registry tweaks, but I don't know how to make it happen for the same window. Retropseudepigastic artery aneurysm: a case report. A case of aneurysm of the retro-pseudepigastic artery is described. Arteriography and Doppler color flow imaging were essential in the diagnosis, and a brief review of the literature is presented. Early operative intervention is necessary to prevent potential limb ischemia and embolic complications. Thromboembolic prophylaxis and anticoagulation should be instituted. Q: Covariance or Contravariance I am struggling to understand covariance and contravariance. It is to be noted that the properties apply to the types only and not to the names of the types (e.g. List is a covariant list while List is a contravariant list). I have a doubt. Say we have two classes, one is List and the other is List. If the interface is List, it is covariant (e.g. List would accept List, but the List would not accept List). 0cc13bf012

To evaluate the health and disability status of people with cancer and their role in systems of care, and to establish whether systems support self-management. A national mail survey, using both a web-based questionnaire and a standard paper format, was sent to the study population. Recruitment was from demographic lists. The study population included people with cancer registered with the two largest cancer registries in the UK (2006-2007). The response rate was 46% (n = 11 984). Compared with a cross-sectional survey in the UK in 2000, there were small increases in the proportion of people with cancer who had a university degree, worked and access to financial resources. Most people with cancer used self-management. Problems with self-management were most likely to arise with respect to physical, emotional and financial needs. In this setting, the use of self-management appeared to be associated with better health status. The strategies cancer survivors use to manage their physical, emotional and financial needs are likely to be constrained by the lack of social support, and by the health and social care systems. The finding that almost all people with cancer in the UK are users of self-management suggests there is scope for increasing patient-centred care to support people with cancer to manage their own well-being and thereby improve outcomes. Theresa May must climb down on her threats to “rip up” the government’s flagship social care plans, Jeremy Corbyn has insisted as the row over the future of the policy escalated. The Labour leader was forced to deny claims that he was threatening to resign over the vote on the “impact assessment” of the social care white paper. It came after his deputy, Tom Watson, warned that “high-profile members of the shadow cabinet” might resign if Labour failed to agree the policy before the end of the week.
