Computer systems may be used for a wide variety of different types of data processing. One type of computer system is a mass storage system. A mass storage system is a storage system which is capable of storing large amounts of information at a relatively low cost. Such a system is highly useful to a computer user that has an information need that is too large to be satisfied by the primary mass storage device, or if a significant number of disk drives are to be used for other purposes. A mass storage system may be coupled to the computer by a SCSI or other bus. A typical mass storage system includes a number of magnetic hard disk drives. In such a system, the hard disk drives may be categorized as either primary or secondary data storage devices. Data is stored on the disk drives on a track of a track and held in a sector of the track. A read-write head is used to write and read data to and from the disk surfaces. The read and write heads are normally mounted on arms of a rotary actuator assembly to move the heads from track to track on the disk surfaces. The rotary actuator assembly is controlled by a controller. In a
