In a briefing on the new coronavirus to the Australian Medical Association, Dr Anne Speckhard, of the International Centre for Infectious Diseases, said authorities were beginning to see more intense transmission as more people were placed in quarantine. Within a week, she said, the system would catch up and there would be a peak in new cases. This would occur as Australia moved into "holiday season" at the end of February. New South Wales, with Sydney at its heart, was holding up particularly well, but the situation in Australia as a whole was deteriorating more quickly. "By the end of next week, we will have exceeded 50,000 cases and around 60,000 cases by the end of this week," she said. "That would be considered a rapid increase."
