The AutoCAD app for Android is the direct descendant of the AutoCAD 2010 app for Windows and is thus as "native" as any other native application on Android. Revisions to AutoCAD 2010 for Android AutoCAD 2010 Android has been revised several times. The first (initial) release in late 2010 (v1.0) was rewritten in Java and based on the desktop versions of AutoCAD 2010. The original AutoCAD 2010 app had a requirement of a Java runtime environment. For this reason, AutoCAD 2010 Android v1.0 was based on the old (statically linked) version of Java: version 1.5. After it became popular, however, it was replaced with a version using Java 1.6, at the request of users. That version was later revised again, and in 2014, the developer released the third revision, v2.0, which has been optimized and improved in its various features, such as performance.
